Building Cancer Care Collaboratives
 for the Seventh Generation

Rodney Haring, PhD, MSW
 Director
 Center of Indigenous Cancer Research
 Roswell Park Comprehensive Cancer Center

LECTURE DESCRIPTION

Rodney Haring, PhD, MSW, will discuss how treaty and wampum conversations have impacted the cancer care of Indigenous populations. Building on this foundation, Dr. Haring will describe how to create culturally congruent practices that will improve the quality of research and care to benefit Native Nations. Additionally, he will lead attendees in thinking about new ways to work together to provide sustainable cancer care for succeeding generations.

LEARNING OUTCOMES

- Utilize and discuss treaty conversations in cancer care through Native Nation, to Cancer Center, to Federal relationships including collaboratives with adjacent rural, suburban, and urban intersections.
- Conceptualize how to build culturally congruent practices of quality improvement round tables, program evaluation, and research programming towards Native Nation beneficence.
- Practice dream storming towards co-creating sustainable cancer care collectives towards healthy generations.

The program was co-provided with the Greensboro Area Health Education Center. The Southeastern American Indian Cancer Health Equity Partnership series created in coordination with Wake Forest School of Medicine, UNC Lineberger Comprehensive Cancer Center, and Duke Cancer Institute in partnership with the UNC Lineberger Cancer Network
