WEBINAR DESCRIPTION

Forming relationships and partnerships with tribal communities are crucial in addressing cancer health disparities among American Indian & Alaska Native populations. Dr. Myra Parker and Craig Dee describe how established trust and relationships with tribal entities led to the development and implementation of tribally-driven strategies to address cancer among Washington State Tribes.

The program was co-provided with the Greensboro Area Health Education Center.

The Southeastern American Indian Cancer Health Equity Partnership lecture series created in coordination with Wake Forest School of Medicine, UNC Lineberger Comprehensive Cancer Center, and Duke Cancer Institute in partnership with the UNC Lineberger Cancer Network
